

Wardrobe's Point

BRIGHT COLORS AND FURS.

BY ANNE RITTENHOUSE.

ON THE COAST OF NORMANDY, August 3.—Some very smart suits in chrysanthemum pink wool are brought out for early autumn.

They are being exploited by French women who have cottages on the fashionable Normandy coast, and go down from cliffs to the casino in the late afternoon for tea and tango.

The name of the color comes from the peculiarity of the weaving, in which a streak of white is blended with a streak of pink, each casting its tone over the other. The effect is admirable, and women who cannot or will not wear pink will find this coloration without objectionable features.

I saw Countess de S. in such a suit yesterday. She had been watching a very uncertain game of tennis over at the courts, played in a gusty wind, and had walked down to the casino for refuge out of the swirling gusts of a channel storm. The weather was cold enough for a show of fur, and she gave her character to the pink suit she wore by adding a scarf of moleskin.

The woolen fabric looked exceedingly comfortable in the chill of the late afternoon, and other women who were braving it out in white linen and muslin enviously.

The skirt was laid in a panel of side pleats at the back which gave the maxixe, for there are greater demands made on the skirt by this amazingly popular and difficult to make than the tango made with its slow measures that requires the feet always close together.

Probably the women who demand extra width in evening skirts if the Brazilian dance succeeds in entirely ousting the Argentine one.

It is, however, that although the smart persons insist that the tango is no longer chic it is danced everywhere and in the best society more often than anything else.

For one reason every one knows it, and all the complexities and exaggerations have been smoothed out so that it is the most comfortable and least fatiguing of the new dances. It makes no demand on one's lung power, as does the one step, nor upon one's agility as does the maxixe.

But it is the fashion to dance the latter, and in this way after the fashion in which the maxixe was introduced, it may come to have a higher place in front, filled in with lace.

SMALL ECONOMIES.

The city housewife in America, with the world's market practically at her command, frequently offers far less palatable meals than her country sister or even the foreign peasant woman for whom she expresses profound pity.

This fact is due largely to her association with her typical American husband. He demands quick results in his business. She demands quick results in her kitchen. If she has a gas stove she counts on saving as many feet of the illuminating fuel as she possibly can, so that beefsteak, chops and cutlets, fried or sautéed dishes, are given the preference over all other methods of cooking. Canned vegetables of every description are used, while the delicatessen shop and the bakery contribute relishes and dessert.

What the housewife saves on gas, however, she loses through lack of nutriment in the food and actual expenditures on high-priced cuts of meat.

There is economy even in the method of using the gas stove. In the case of dishes which are to be simmered or stewed very gently a sheet-iron "spread" should be employed. This is an oblong sheet of iron, large enough to hold two pans or pots, and its center is placed directly over the jet. If one of these dishes holds soup stock and the other dried fruit or a vegetable which should simmer, they can be set side by side on the spreader, and the heat will be sufficient to keep them just at the boiling point. In fact, if the flow of gas is strong, the jets will have to be turned down or they will boil too fast. They should be brought to a boil, however, before they are placed on the spreader.

Lack of flavor and "body" condemns many an American housewife's cooking. And these are the features of restaurant cooking, particularly in foreign restaurants, for which she expresses the greatest admiration. The body or backbone of economical cooking is the stock pot. The flavor is due to well stewed pantry. The housewife who buys from hand to mouth and wanders from green grocers to delicatessen shops seldom favors her food well. There are many flavorings besides onion.

Belts Made at Home.

Those pretty hip belts are so easily made at home of linen or pique. If you have an old belt, you can easily cut a paper pattern from it, fit it about yourself to see that it sets correctly and then proceed to lay it over your goods and cut the linen or pique belt. The belt in question is one that sort of dips in the front and suggests strongly the vest belt, the only difference being that in this fabric belt there are no pockets. Either after or before the belt is cut out, work tiny roses over it in pink French knots. The roses are really nothing more than little round dots. The French knots cuddled closely together to resemble a rose. Here and there, peeking out from under, are green French knots, which are meant for foliage.

On some of the belts are embroidered tiny green stems about a quarter of an inch long. These are scattered at regular intervals over the entire belt. If it is desired to make the belt in another color, the roses may be in yellow or red. If the color note is to be blue, the French knots may be made from forget-me-nots and one yellow knot for the center. The foliage may be added or omitted, as preferred. The belts are very fashionable and easily made. Besides, they are very easily made.

Some of the new satin afternoon gowns have tiny lines of white silk, to show when the wearer moves.

Novelty for Baby.

Have you seen the fascinating little kimono for the babies?

They are just the prettiest things imaginable, and you will not be able to resist the temptation to make one for the tiny girl that has just come to the home of a friend. They are made of the softest silk or silk crepe and are long or short. Cut with kimono sleeves, they are simple in construction, having but two seams.

If you desire to make the kimono particularly pretty, you must embroider it with tiny flowers about the neck, sleeves and down each side of the front. Choose forget-me-nots for the kimono of white crepe de chine, or a wild-rose pattern is lovely if you prefer pink.

The kimono is always lined with the white chine silk. A dainty short kimono can be fashioned of pale blue crepe de chine, with a truly Japanese design of cherry or plum blossoms embroidered with pale pink and white silk for the flowers and pale tones of green for the foliage. For summer wear the silk chosen is of the lightest weight, and there is no interlining. But if you want the little garment for winter wear it must have a layer of heavy cotton flannel for the interlining to produce sufficient warmth.

There is nothing lovelier than a silk kimono for a gift. There are not apt to be many duplicates.

The New Footgear.

At present, smart footgear occupies a great deal of attention, and the woman who realizes the importance of the small details of a costume will invest in a large selection of shoes, for almost every gown demands harmonizing shoes.

One of the newest ideas introduced upon smart alpacas for afternoon and evening wear is the ankle strap, which clasps about the ankle in bracelet form. There are also jeweled ankle straps—not the stiff metal bands of other days, but flexible straps of ribbon or satin, with jeweled slides.

The fall high boots with wrinkled tops will be worn. They are fashioned of soft leathers and extend half way to the knees.

Embroidered leggings and garters will also be worn, with all footgear stockings of a color to match the gown are favored. The vogue for black and white, however, makes white stockings the correct color to wear with black shoes.

Maitre d'Hotel Butter.

Maitre D'HOTEL BUTTER is an appetizing addition to broiled fish, to beefsteak and to many sorts of vegetable butters—or more in proportion—and is spread over the hot meat or vegetables or fish when it is wanted.

To make it cream two tablespoonsful of butter—or more in proportion—and add a tablespoonful of finely chopped parsley, half a teaspoonful of salt, half a salt-spoonful of pepper and then, drop by drop, a tablespoonful of lemon juice. The heat of the food with which this butter is used melts it sufficiently.

Milk for Saucepans.

Cleaning a saucepan in which milk has been boiled is often a troublesome task. A simple method is to quickly replace the lid after pouring out the boiling milk, so that the steam will not have time to escape and allow the saucepan to cool before taking the lid off again. Then put the pan in cold water to seep; afterward it can be washed easily and quickly without the bother of scraping.

FOR THE COIFFURE.

The coiffure ornament plays a conspicuous part in the evening costume, and it should be selected with great care. In the first place, it should harmonize with the dress worn, for you would not think of wearing an Egyptian headpiece of vivid coloring with a gown of Grecian simplicity.

The wide bandeau of ribbon, jeweled embroidery or metal tissue is no longer in favor, and we find the narrow band of ribbon, chain of beads or fillet of gold or pearls supplanting it.

These coiffure ornaments are decidedly becoming to the present mode of wearing the hair, and every woman who attends formal social functions should possess an assortment of headpieces.

Many of these are extremely simple in construction, and can be made at home by the woman who is clever at needlework.

They are fashioned of lace and tulle, and are appropriate for the debutante or her elders.

Many of them are all white, and, for this reason, may be worn with almost any costume.

To duplicate the prettiest designs, first fashion a chain bandeau in this manner:

With flexible wire make links, which are looped together to form a chain, and cover them with white satin ribbon. All the links have not to be fashioned once, but each must be drawn through the other and completed before the next is joined to it. When the chain is sufficiently long to encircle the head, make an ornament from white tulle, gathering it near the lower edge to form a fanlike arrangement. Stitch this ornament to the side of the bandeau. If you prefer to purchase the ready-made, they are sold in the millinery department of any large shop.

Another charming ornament is made by making two or three loops of white wire and covering them with several thicknesses of tulle. Fasten these in the hair, and the tulle will fall and sweep the ornament to the bandeau.

An oddly shaped ornament of white tulle is made by first making a straight piece of wire, three and a half or four inches long, and folding layers of tulle about it until it resembles a brush. Wind narrow strips of tulle about the base and sew tiny brilliant to the ornament. To the base of this is attached a small chain of tulle.

Tulle and white marabou are combined in another design. The tulle is folded many times and tied in a broad bow, the center of which is adorned with brilliant. Several sprays of marabou are placed in the center of the bow, and the ornament is complete, ready to be knotted about the links of the bandeau.

If two brilliant are sewn or pasted to each link of the bandeau its beauty will be greatly enhanced.

The bandeau is always an acceptable gift to the young girl, who, as a rule, can never count too many of these charming accessories among her possessions.

The cape costume will probably be as much of an institution in the future as the coat and skirt costume.

FOREIGN FASHIONS FOR AMERICANS

BY LILLIAN E. YOUNG.

It's more or less of a comfort to get one's mind off of disquieting thoughts, especially when the thoughts are about war time and the dangers of being chased across the Atlantic by hostile ships, so I am endeavoring to get down to work and forget such things by picking out the most fashionable costume so far this summer.

It is tea-time in the lounge, and not only to forget our common fear, but to keep up the usual custom, the women on board our ship have given just as much attention to making a smart appearance as they would were they safely ensconced in their own dressing rooms on good old terra firma.

The dress shown here strikes me as being among the very best I've seen, and if the girl who is wearing it will

TEA-TIME FROCK OF UNDENIABLE CHARM.

Just stay in sight long enough I can manage its description.

All-over shaded lace in cream color is used for the tunic mounted on the hip line to a mauve chiffon top. It is lined with white satin. In the center of the bodice are two large, round, medallion-shaped medallions in heavier lace, and a half of one of these trims the center of the blouse as well. In the front and back of the little shadow lace jumper which is worn over a white net bodice.

The sachet—a deep rose of cream-colored tulle and tied well below the hip line in cream. Cream-colored tulle is also used for the underskirt. A pink rose at the waist gives just the needed touch of color to this dainty gown.

This is a beautiful and elegant frock for an informal evening frock for the coming season. If desired the gumpie may be made with a more expansive décolletage and shorter sleeves to suit the purpose.

Capes of Satin.

Have you noticed the fascinating little capes of black satin or velvet which are being worn with lingerie frocks? They are circular in cut and hang from the shoulders like those worn by the cavaliers of the Elizabethan era. White satin or moire is used to line the capes, and they are sometimes tied about the neck with heavy cords of silk. They are to be had in different lengths and some of them are longer at the center back.

The vogue for the cape has even extended to the realm of evening gowns, for there are lovely models of white silk, chiffon or lace, with capes of black chantilly lace suspended gracefully from the shoulders.
